

DAILY PLANET

ALL THE NEWS THAT FITS

Monday, Jan. 24

2000

Hubble Space Telescope reopens eye on the universe

NASA's Hubble Space Telescope is back in business. Images taken Jan. 10-13 of remote galaxies and a dying star were released Monday. The pictures are a culmination of the successful Space Shuttle servicing mission (STS-103) last December, which restored Hubble to its full capability.

Blue Cross/Blue Shield rep here
9-11 a.m. Tues.,
Bldg. 4200,
room 324A

Fed employees' Thrift Savings Plan Open Season runs through Jan. 31

'Inside Marshall' Web site gets new look

Check out the new Marshall intranet site! "Inside Marshall" has been redesigned to make it easier to use, and to capture more information around the Center. See it at: <http://inside.msfc.nasa.gov/INSIDE/>

Leadership Forum Feb. 1 kicks off Black History Month

A Leadership Forum from 1:30-3 p.m. Feb. 1 in Morris Auditorium kicks off Black History Month activities. Panelists will discuss the key leadership competencies and skills for effective leaders, ways to improve leadership skills and the most important future leadership challenges.

Marshall Center Open House will be May 20