President Bush to offer vision Wednesday for America's continued space exploration

President George W. Bush will speak from NASA Headquarters at 2 p.m. CST Wednesday to offer his vision for America's continued leadership in space exploration. The event will be on NASA TV, streaming video at <http://www.nasa.gov> and on Marshall TV. "NASA is always at its finest when faced with grand challenges," said NASA Administrator Sean O'Keefe. "The President will set in motion a wonderful opportunity to extend our exploration horizons and open new doors of possibilities for the next generation of explorers. Through our work to implement the President's vision, I'm confident we will energize U.S. creativity, innovation, technology development and leadership."
