Nominations open for Service to America Medals

Nominations are being taken for Service to America Medals -- a national awards program recognizing federal employees who have made significant contributions to the country. "This is an opportunity for you to nominate a co-worker or other federal employee who you believe should be recognized for significant contributions to our country," said James L. Jennings, NASA associate deputy administrator for Institutions and Asset Management. Anyone can nominate a federal employee for the award. Deadline for nominations is March 1. To submit a nomination, go to <http://www.govexec.com/pps/>.
